More than half of the inhabitants of old age homes were suffering from one or other mental health problems. Depression was the most common mental health problem. The inhabitants suffering from psychiatric illness had one or more associated physical morbidity. An exceptional increase in the number and proportion of older adults in the country, rapid increase in nuclear families and contemporary changes in psychosocial matrix and values of time compelled this segment of society to live alone as in old age home. This segment of population is more vulnerable of health related problems including mental health problems. Mental health problems were found to be more common in the young-old group. In males all elderly except one in each age group were suffering from one or other mental health problem.
